Journal of Transdisciplinary Peace Praxis

W: <https://jtp.uk>

In January 2019, Frontpage launches the Journal of Transdisciplinary Peace Praxis (JTTP), a peer-reviewed, biannual, scholarly journal, both in print and online versions, bringing together peace practitioners with academics to explore radical responses to social conflict, war and injustice.

Vision

JTTP aspires to publish well-reasoned and thought provoking single and co-authored works that integrate cutting edge research and practice on subjects related to human social flourishing and peace in local, national, and international contexts.

Our vision is to facilitate critical dialogue on complex social problems thereby empowering thoughtful responses to the world's wicked problems which help guide readers towards nonviolent peaceful futures.

Mission

The realisation of nonviolent peaceful futures requires collaborative exploration of themes, social resources, and problems that no one field or discipline is capable of understanding alone.

In creating JTTP, Frontpage Publications Limited harkens to a bygone era of pre-scientific reasoning—an era that privileges a science of collaborative social experience and qualitative analytical methods as valuable contributors to the human knowledge base.

Objective

JTTP fills an important transdisciplinary gap that currently exists in traditional academic journals. This gap often neglects opportunities for truly collaborative research and praxis on the complex and multi-dimensional realities of positive peace and reconciliation systems.

JTTP thus provides a dynamic forum for sharing information and experiences primarily catering to academics, activists particularly in the disciplines of Peace and Conflict Studies, Political Science, International Relations, Human Rights, History and professionals, policymakers, organisations, institutions and individuals who nurture a firm belief in peace and human rights.

Globalisation, Democracy and Corruption: An Indian Perspective

Globalisation, Democracy and Corruption: An Indian Perspective is a compilation of articles and commentaries on contemporary issues of Indian Polity and Economy.

Globalisation, neither a plague nor a panacea, makes Bardhan's approach stand out among the contentious debates. Within this framework, the discourse probes into how economic globalisation which can address the problem of poverty has affected wages, incomes and access to resources for the poorest people in India and abroad. Like globalisation, democracy too, despite rhetoric, does not offer magic solutions. Democracy often encourages popular movements against capitalist excesses but is also subject to capture by oligarchic interests. In a comparative analysis, the author examines as to how and how far the Chinese economic performance, in spite of pervasive corruption, has been better than India's.

A perfect blend of an economist's insight and field experience based analysis offering guidelines for broad-based development, this volume is an invaluable companion for the policymakers, academia and the general readership as well.

Pranab Bardhan is Professor of Economics, University of California, Berkeley. Before joining Berkeley, Bardhan taught at MIT, Trinity College, Cambridge, St Catherine's College, Oxford, London School of Economics, ISI and Delhi School of Economics.

ISBN: 978 93 81043 17 2, PB, Size: 215×140 mm, 260 pp, Price: £ 14.95; INR 495; $ 21.95
Kindle Edition, Price: $7.95

Communalism: India's Struggle for Democracy and Pluralism

Analysing contentious contemporary issues in historical perspective, the discourse weighs as to how the potency of communalism corrodes the plural core of Indian democracy. The critique is, however, not limited to the issue of religious polarisation alone since the author critically examines the obstacles other marginalised sections are often encountered with. Anyone having quest for democratic values must confront the challenges posed in the discourse.

Ram Punyani took voluntary retirement from IIT, Bombay, in 2004 to work for upholding plural, secular, democratic ethos in India. Prof Punyani has been bestowed with Indira Gandhi National Integration Award (2006) and National Communal Harmony Award (2007) for spreading the message of peace and communal harmony.

Alipore Bomb Trial 1908–1910: A Compilation of Unpublished Documents (Volume 1)

Having failed to kill Lieutenant-Governor Andrew Fraser after two attempts, on 30 April 1908, Khudiram Bose and Prafulla Chaki blasted a carriage at Muzaffarpur, Bihar to eliminate Magistrate D H Kingsford. Immediately after that 36 persons, including Sri Aurobindo, his brother Barindra Kumar Ghose were arrested for 'waging war against the King-Emperor'.

In the history of India's freedom struggle, the discourse, which includes hitherto unpublished documents related to the historic trial in Alipore Sessions Court, is an invaluable critique where the author critically examines the issues like Aurobindo's ideas on violent struggle, expansion of the secret societies, 'daring actions' like the murder of Naren Gossain inside the jail, and killing of public prosecutor, and other police officers, with an overall a review of criminal justice system prevalent in British-India.

ISBN: 978 93 81043 23 3, HB, Size: 234×156, 844 pp, Price: £75; INR 2,195; $100

Alipore Bomb Trial 1908–1910: Arguments in Courts and Judgements (Volume 2)

The discourse critically examines the trajectory of colonial justice from committal inquiry stage to the hearing of the appeal in the High Court. Laws and procedures were violated more by design than due to inadvertence. Aurobindo was acquitted in the Sessions trial, though he was considered as 'the most dangerous person' in India. To remove him from the political scene, a charge of sedition was brought, but the High Court quashed the complaint. With a researcher's acumen supported by the unpublished documents, the author shows that the British Government was a prisoner of their own liberal law and justice reform.

An astute analysis of the historic courtroom perorations of Chittaranjan Das, and other defence counsels in the Sessions Court as well as in the High Court and the rare photographs included make an interesting read.

Dr Amiya K Samanta, IPS, retired in 1995 as Director General of Intelligence Branch, West Bengal. Samanta's important publications include: Terrorism in Bengal (Edited classified documents in 6 Vols, 1995), Gorkhaland Movement: A Study in Ethnic Separatism (2000).

Resilience: Stories of Muslim Women

The treaties illustrates that no matter what the economic impediment or social taboo, given the means and empathy, women can soar to success. In the early eighties, social activist Shabnam Hashmi, set up Seher Adult Education Centre in Nizamuddin Basti, Delhi for women who were mostly school dropouts or had not studied at all. But right from the beginning hostility came from the Basti residents for whom Muslim girls going to study was anti-Islam. Yet, the girls refused to give up. Today, Farida, who, made to wear a burqa at 9, married off at 13, abandoned at 15, runs an independent organisation; Ayesha who brought up her son to be an MBA, and her daughter a Master in Science. And Mussarat, whose grandmother kept her locked at home, now works for an international NGO.

Shubha Menon has written plays, articles and stories both on offline and online platforms. Resilience: Stories of Muslim Women is her second book; her debut, The Second Coming (HarperCollins, 2014) has made a mark in the genre of romantic fiction.

China's Economic Reform Ideological Legitimacy and Deng Xiaoping Theory

The discourse examines the debates among Chinese theoreticians regarding the economic reforms, introducing private economy, stock exchange, induction of foreign direct investment (FDI), disinvestment or total closure of state-owned enterprises, adopted by the leaders of the Communist Party of China (CPC) since the late 1970s legitimising the reforms in relationship to the ideals of Marxism, particularly, Mao and Deng Xiaoping Thoughts. The book reveals how non-dogmatic 'Seek truth from facts' principle of 'Deng Xiaoping Theory' acted as the driving force to make China the world's second largest economy in 30 odd years.

Narayan C Sen (Sen Nalan) was in the faculty of Chinese Language at the University of Calcutta, Kolkata, Visva-Bharati, Santiniketan, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, and also held the position of Research Professor of Chinese Studies, The Asiatic Society, Kolkata, India. Sen also served as an Expert in The Foreign Languages Press, Beijing, from 1982 to 1993.

Indian National Evolution A Brief Survey of the Origin and Progress of the Indian National Congress and the Growth of Indian Nationalism

The thesis examines the movements leading to Indian National Congress' birth in 1885 and the multifaceted growth it achieved during the first three decades of its political journey up to 1915.

Unlike any other history of the Indian National Congress, it is more than a narrative of what during the initial years the Congress and its organs had planned and accomplished under the colonial impediments.

Amvika Charan Mazumdar (1851-1922), the author, who was elevated to the President's position at Lucknow Session of the Indian National Congress in 1916, put forward for the first time the idea that the Indian National Congress was not just a party, it was also a national movement.

Sabyasachi Bhattacharya is the Chairman of Indian Council of Historical Research. Prior to that, he was the Vice-Chancellor, Visva-Bharati, Santiniketan, India (1991-1995).

Nation or the Empire: Indian Civilians at the Crossroads

The treatise chronicles the pioneering native Indians who, as members of Indian Civil Service (ICS), dared to fight against the mighty British Empire. In 1855, when the door was opened for Indians to enter into ICS, starting from Satyendranath Tagore in 1863, many Indians, competing with great adversities, joined the coveted service. Racial discrimination and various invidious policies of the imperial rule tormented many of the patriotic Indian civil servants who openly criticised the colonial regulations verging on revolt. Imperial bureaucracy did not countenance this upright conduct and the dissenters' prospect in the service suffered, but this could not deter nationalist Indians from responding to the call of the motherland. Circumstance was thus very clearly set out for a choice between serving 'Nation' or 'The Empire'.

Satyaki Nath, a post-graduate from IIT, Kanpur, India, works for Indian Railways. A passionate reader of History, Satyaki became obsessed with 'Her Majesty' and his maiden attempt is aimed at unravelling the delicate and often fragile relationship between the 'Imperial Masters' and their 'Indian Servants'.

The Sickle and the Crescent Communists, Muslim League and India's Partition

The critique offers a new approach to India's Partition. While Indian National Congress and Muslim League are primarily blamed for vivisection of the country, the communists' support to the Muslim League between 1942 and 1947 only accelerated the birth of the two nations: India and Pakistan. With research made in the archival sources including the intelligence documents, the discourse makes an interesting read to examine how the Communist Party of India, a class-based representative had joined hands with the Muslim League sponsored Direct Action Day in August 1946 which rendered hundreds dead and thousands homeless only in the city of Calcutta itself.

Sunanda Sanyal obtained his MA both from the University of Calcutta, India and the University of Leeds, UK and took up teaching as his profession. A devoted educationist, Sanyal is president of the Ganamukti Parishad which works towards 'cleansing politics'.

Soumya Basu, an enterprising young scholar, made sustained efforts in collating the pertinent documents from various archival sources across the country.

ISBN: 978 81 90884 16 7, HB, Size: 215×140 mm, 196 pp, Price: £ 14.95; INR 450; $ 24.95

Politics in Hunger Regime

In India, even after six decades of independence and planned economy employing 'pro-poor' assistance programmes, the hunger-regime has consolidated in many parts of India.

The discourse examines the population living under the shadow of hunger with particular emphasis on the Food Movements in West Bengal, India.

The treatise throws light on the outrage in the Public Distribution System (Ration-Riots) in West Bengal, India during 2009-11, and critically examines the status of Paschim Medinipur, a district recording starvation deaths, seized the international media attention; the research also chronicles the sufferings and struggle of the people in the Tea Garden region of the northern parts of West Bengal.

In a unique way, the book, for the first time in India, makes an attempt to link the Right to Food with the Right to Information in a hunger-regime.

Branding the Migrant: Arguments of Rights, Welfare and Security

The Unique Identification (UID)/Aadhaar project has burst upon the nation with surprising ferocity. The government started implementing Aadhaar-enabled direct cash transfers for 29 schemes in 51 districts, spread over 16 states and also plans to cover the entire nation by the end of December 2013. Yet, it is far from clear if Aadhaar is an undisruptive benevolent initiative of the government, seeking to empower the needy and maximise the outreach of social-security schemes.

Against this backdrop, this volume endeavours to engage with the politics and history of the state's population identification exercises. In doing so, it goes beyond the specifics of the UID project to examine the status of the migrants who being a minority compared to the residents, remain mostly beyond the embrace of the state. This volume, therefore, aspires to test the idea and impact of the UID at its limits—focussing on its impact on migrants—and interrogate if the reach of the state can after all exceed its grasp.

Still Canadian? Ethnicity, Race and Questions of Difference among Canadian Migrants to the United States

In recent years, most studies on immigrant adaptation and assimilation have examined questions of ethnicity, identity and belonging among groups that are marked as racially different from the white majority in the United States. This book examines the questions of ethnicity, race, identity and belonging by focussing on the experiences of a relatively invisible group: Canadian migrants to the United States.

The experiences of Canadian migrants highlight the need to recognise hierarchies of whiteness among white migrants fully understand ethnic identities in the contemporary world.

Human Rights: Voices of World's Young Activists

This collection encapsulates hopes and critiques of young activists from Armenia, Austria, Brazil, Cambodia, Costa Rica, Egypt, Italy, Kenya, Laos, Macedonia, Philippines, Uganda, UK, USA, and Venezuela, who are passionately engaged in fostering a world where more people can access human rights. Young Activists' views on what needs to be prioritised, how far we have come in our struggle to realise human rights and how much further we have to travel on this road make the discourse an invaluable one. The assessment also tells us how many hopes of the framers of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted sixty six years back, have remained unfulfilled.

Justice, Liberty, Equality: Dalits in Independent India

The treatise critically examines how money and muscle power, together with political string-pulling often result in denial of justice for the hapless 'have-nots', especially the Dalits (untouchables). Citing the case-studies primarily drawn from Uttar Pradesh, India, registering the highest rate of crime against the Dalits, the author chronicles how the Dalits, with implicit support from the administration, are subjected to humiliation by the well-heeled higher castes, like being garlanded with shoes, their faces blackened or being forced to ride an ass; yet, violence, custodial deaths that are committed against the marginalised and deprived castes often go unrecorded.

Africa: Beyond the Tragic History

Africa: Beyond the Tragic History chronicles the intense wretchedness the Sub-Saharan African populace has been traditionally subjected to in extreme hunger, overall poor human condition—a situation which is yet to see any altered panorama in the wake of globalisation. Despite the rhetoric on western humanitarianism campaign or the myth of neo-colonialism, Africa's gains have been marginally confined to public relations only. Analysing the outcome of Congo's destiny, Rwanda genocide, Uganda crises, desecration of Somalia or the fallacy of peace-keeping fuelled by western media duplicity, the critique shows how the countries in Africa are reeling under political anarchy.

Voices of Internally Displaced Persons in Kenya A Human Rights Perspective

Voices of Internally Displaced Persons in Kenya: A Human Rights Perspective examines the continuing vulnerabilities of internally displaced persons (IDPs) in Kenya who fled to the IDP Camps from the ethnic violence following the country's disputed elections in December 2007. The authors raise two important issues for human rights advocates. One, that the conditions in these camps do not measure up to the standards in terms of housing, food, water, education, health and on violence against women. Two, the response efforts are often fragmented and are only designed to address the conditions in the camps.

Margins to Centre Stage: Empowering Dalits in India

In India, life of millions of Dalits is characterised by long, consistent struggle from cradle to grave. Their life is defined by caste-discrimination, exploitation, abuse, and denial of basic right to life with resources for survival—food, shelter, clothing, livelihood, and education.

Margins to Centre Stage: Empowering Dalits in India chronicles the process of empowerment of many powerless and marginalised Dalits, located in Varanasi district of Uttar Pradesh, India. The discourse would be beneficial for the educators, students and practitioners of social work, and administrators in welfare and development sector, NGO and policy planners.

Human Trafficking: Interlocking Systems of Exploitation A Focus on Pakistan

Trafficking constitutes a fundamental moral challenge to all those who believe in the principles of humanity and human rights. Drawing upon gender and human rights perspectives, the critique examines the issue both at micro and macro levels to analyse how political economy of trafficking influences micro level experiences of victims of trafficking.

Using data from Pakistan, which is a source, transit and receiving country for trafficked victims, and other regional and international comparative data, the authors show that contemporary definitions and debates about trafficking do not always capture the realities of trafficking on the ground.

Forced Migration & Media Mirrors

Forced migration is increasingly becoming a threat to peace and stability of people's lives in many parts of the world. India is no exception to the trend. How do the media reflect this phenomenon? Are they sensitive enough to the multiple dimensions of this great human tragedy—its impact on people's rights, ethnic relations, gender justice, etc? Do biases creep in during their coverage? Are the voices of the dispossessed heard? How can the latter set up alternative channels to disseminate their own news and views? Do new media provide more possibilities in this regard? The authors include both accomplished academics and ace journalists who have been studying the phenomenon of forced migration for a long time in their own ways.

Strangling Liberty: Media in Distress in Pakistan

The critique makes an attempt to show as to how tremendous pressure simultaneously stemming from diverse dimensions in the form of extremists' command on one end and state repressions on the other, ideological constraints, international power game, ethno-religious overtones, and most importantly, the role of Secret Agencies including Inter-Services Intelligence (ISI) and other military tyrannies, have geared up the issue relating to the oppression of freedom of media in Pakistan an international hot topic for debate. Pakistan has emerged as one of the most unsafe countries for journalists, claiming at least 118 lives of the working journalists in the recent past. The critique provides an insight into the hostile environment in which the media personnel in Pakistan are undertaking their professional responsibilities and fighting for their legitimate rights at the crossroads of extremist outfits. With an in-depth study, the book also examines the new trends of extremism in the society and how they are further narrowing down the already suffocated environment incompatible to the freedom of expression.

Forced Migration in North East India: A Media Reader

A Media Reader is a comprehensive ready reference and toolkit for journalists, researchers, and people in general—who are interested in the media and North East India. Although the states in North East India are geographically isolated and economically underdeveloped, they have a distinctive cultural, socio-economic and political identity; having borders with several countries—China, Myanmar, Bhutan, Nepal and Bangladesh—since vivisection of the Indian subcontinent in 1947, the region has faced waves of population influx from across the borders at various times. Forced migration and displacement due to repeated ethnic violence have led to hundreds of villages being burnt and thousands of people killed. Besides ethnic conflicts, natural calamities such as floods and erosion, as well as construction activities or eviction in the reserve forest areas have added to the misery of the displaced persons languishing in the temporary camps for decades. The issues often do not get due coverage in the media, and many journalists feel that the resources at their disposal are inadequate. The discourse is an effort to bridge this gap.

Counter-Gaze: Media, Migrants, Minorities

The book assesses the situation of migrant minorities not just in Third World colonised countries in South Asia but also in the Western societies in Europe which hitherto had not been subjected to any meaningful analysis. The discourse throws up some critical questions on how migrants have come to form minority communities, how their claims to citizenship, rights and justice have occupied space in the politics of the nation and supra-national bodies. This research shows that there is an increasing familiarity between the two sets of experiences and the book is not so much about counter gaze but about the resultant familiarity in human rights struggles as well.

Rediscovering Swami Vivekananda

The treatise makes a critical examination of the keynote of Swami Vivekananda's philosophy which was spiritual unity of the universe, and most importantly, raising interfaith awareness which the oriental monk introduced in the occident more than hundred years ago. An uncompromising Advaitist, Vivekananda (1863-1902) has always been a champion of freedom—a doctrine which mirrors his idea of socialism visualising a movement in which the individuals acted freely and spontaneously for the good of the whole.

'Harmony and Peace, and not Dissension', Vivekananda's stirring call at the concluding session of the historic Parliament of Religions at Chicago in September 1893 has the most significant relevance today when erosion of ethical values is a global experience, human morals are fast decaying and religious fundamentalism is prompting fratricides.

Indology, Historiography and the Nation: Bengal, 1847-1947

The discourse traces the rise and growth of historical consciousness of a nationality between 1847 and 1947 through an examination of the Indological historiography in Bengali language. It shows, most of the Indological tracts in the Bengali language during the colonial times needed the mediation of culture for ushering in modernity in Bengal's own sense of history. Indology served such a purpose of cultural mediation.

The book presents an absorbing discussion on Indology, history writing, and nationalist consciousness in Bengal in the hundred years following 1847, ten years before the great Mutiny of 1857 was to break out.

Krishna Bhattacharya Samaddar was a Reader of history and had researched in the field of Indological historiography. A specialist in girl child education, she died on 6 September 2013.

I Could Not Save Mahatma Gandhi Untold Stories from a Witness's Diary (New Edition)

The book has its genesis in this unpublished diary of Professor Dr Jagdishchandra Jain (1909-1994), a renowned scholar and author, held the Chair in the Universities of Bombay, India, Peking, China and Kiel, Germany.

In early January 1948, Prof Jain, who later became the Chief Prosecution Witness of the Mahatma Gandhi Murder Trial, came to know of the plot to assassinate Mahatma Gandhi. He immediately informed the Bombay Government, but unfortunately, his warning went unheeded. What followed was a series of plots, intrigues and an amazing tale of Government apathy versus a lone citizen's frustrating attempt to thwart one of the biggest conspiracies of the century. Jain paints a vivid picture of the assassination plot and elaborates how the crucial information which could have altered the history of India, was ignored by the administration.

Gandhi's Dilemma in War and Independence

Critically examining Gandhi's views during the period of India's passage to political independence on issues such as war, decolonisation, nationalist challenge, state sovereignty, problems of governance and so on, the discourse asks a pertinent question: was Gandhi as confident in his political agenda and methods as history has asserted to the present day? Gandhi, again a satyagrahi, an ardent propagator of nonviolent resistance to injustice throughout his life, appears in the eyes of the The Englishman, as an extremist and saboteur of the Allied democratic cause in the World War II. The discourse unveils a new dimension to Gandhi's towering personality with the suggestion that time was closing down on him. It was a situation of classic aporia, when exit from the problem that Gandhi struggled to escape from became impossible in its own terms.

Ranabir Samaddar is the Director of the Calcutta Research Group. He has worked extensively on the contemporary issues of justice, human rights, forms of autonomy, forced displacement, partitions, trans-border migration, refugee care and protection, and minority rights and popular democracy in the context of post-colonial nationalism with special reference to South Asia. He is also the editor-in-chief of the South Asia Peace Studies Series. His current work is on theories and practices of dialogue, a question crucial to the politics of justice and reconciliation.

The Real Thing: Coke's Bumpy Ride through India

The Real Thing: Coke's Bumpy Ride through India, is a non-fiction real life story of the Atlanta-based The Coca Cola Company's long troubled business journey in India. Entering India in 1991 after a 14-year exile, Coke's subsequent policies and practices have been mired in controversy. The pesticides in colas, the closure of the company's Kerala plant following its exposé as a groundwater guzzler, and the company's constant fight with environmentalists, social activists and the government provided the impetus for writing this book. Having tracked Coke for over two decades, Nantoo Banerjee's book provides, possibly for the first time in India, a well-researched look into the operation of a major multinational.

The critique provides a unique case study which would be a valuable companion to the management professionals, students, regulatory authorities and opinion leaders.

Nantoo Banerjee served Coca-Cola India, first as a consultant and later as Director, Public Affairs & Communications. A working journalist for over three decades, Banerjee was associated with The Indian Express, The Times of India, Business Standard, The Financial Express and The Telegraph.

The Price: When Bookkeeping Means Bookcooking

How reliable and trustworthy are corporate books of accounts? Why are public companies, banks and financial institutions going bankrupt without prior and proper knowledge of shareholders and creditors? Aren't the auditors—internal and external—obliged to know or find out and report the true financial picture of the organisation for the benefit of stakeholders?

The critique examines the issues involving corporate financial corruption, or 'bookcooking', in connivance with auditors, bankers, credit rating agencies and the government.

The treatise, authored by Nantoo Banerjee, is based on a specific accounting fraud case of a public company, Satyam Computers, a stock exchange listed giant both in India and the US. It is the outcome of relentless research made at the corporate's archives and interviews conducted with insiders. It is also an analysis of the roles played by auditors vis-à-vis the regulating authorities, the Securities and Exchange Board of India, Reserve Bank of India, Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) and so on.

Women's Encounter with Disaster

The world is facing increasingly frequent and intense disasters, both natural and man-made, with devastating impacts. Women play a pivotal role in providing economic and mental assistance to the family and community in post-disaster rebuilding activities and actively participate in disaster deterrence programmes.

In the volume, the gender mainstreaming and disaster has been focussed from multi-dimensional canvas such as gender perspective of the disaster aftermath; community oriented disaster management; relevance of inter-sectionality in matters of gender biased social vulnerability; economic aspects of post-disaster scenario; gender-specific role, knowledge and power of women at grassroots level and their ways of making space in disaster field; gender sensitive analysis in the context of alternative development and culture; and applied usage of combating disaster.

Women's Encounter with Globalization

Women's Encounter with Globalization is an investigation to women's varied experiences in an increasingly globalized world. In situations where women have been historically repressed or discriminated under a patriarchal division of labour, some features of globalization may have liberating consequences. While globalization presents opportunities to some women also causes marginalization of many others. Women play a distinct role in globalization, experience more harmful effects, and often become a constituency for anti-systemic movements. The present volume will throw focus on the issue of women's power in the era of globalization. The contributors analysed the gender politics across the globe touching a number of continents and sub-continent.

Engineer's Handbook for Implementation of Industrial Projects

The practising engineering professionals undertaking projects for industrial complexes frequently require information on various fields of engineering for design as well as construction. Engineer's Handbook for Implementation of Industrial Projects is meant to serve this purpose for, in a holistic manner,

- (i) it starts from the scratch, i.e., selection of site and surveying, and goes on to complete the construction work;
- (ii) it is full of photographs of the actual work executed;
- (iii) ample examples have also been drawn from similar works.

Harsimran Singh, having vast experience in construction of various railway engineering projects, is now posted as Deputy General Manager, South-Eastern Railway, India.

Intimate Tussles

This book presents in translation a set of Manik Bandyopadhyay's early stories, written in his twenties and early-thirties, wherein he examines gender relations, generally in the context of conjugality, mostly within extended families, with his unsentimental, clear-eyed observation against the backdrop of various socioeconomic classes in rural, semi-urban, and urban Bengal of the time.

Manik Bandyopadhyay, a major post-Rabindranath neo-realist writer of Bengali fiction, was born in 1908 and he died in 1956, after battling health and financial problems. The singularity of his early work lies in his acute insights into the socio-psychology of man-woman relationships in the concrete world at that juncture of Bengal's history. Their accounts of intimate tussles focus on the interactive processes of ongoing change in relationships, not on finding a final resolution or conclusion.

Kalpana Bardhan, the translator, earned a Cambridge PhD and worked twenty years as an economist, before putting thirty years in translating selections from Bengali literature. Her published translations include 3 novels, 3 story collections and a 2-volume anthology of Bengali Literature.

The Picture of My Early Life (Jibansmriti)

Rabindranath Tagore's unconventional autobiography, Jibansmriti (in Bengali) is a rambling series of 'memory pictures' that the great litterateur chronicled covering the first twenty-seven formative years of his life. The descriptions are insightful, informative of the period and are wrapped in wry and self-deprecating humour. The Picture of My Early Life, a definitive translation in English of Jibansmriti, presents an opportunity to the English-speaking global audience to discover Nobel Litterature's vision of universal humanity with a hope that it also helps to dispel the notion that Tagore was solely a mystic poet.

Prasenjit Saha, an alumnus of Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Kharagpur, India is an engineer by profession who feels strongly about promoting Bengali literature to the world.

Patrick Colm Hogan is a Professor in the Department of English, the Programme in Comparative Literature and Cultural Studies, and the India Studies Programme at the University of Connecticut, USA.

Tagore's Best Short Stories

In commemoration of Rabindranath Tagore's (1861-1941) 150th birth anniversary, this new collection of English translation of his selected short stories opens up the possibility of an English-reading global audience discovering a new contemporary relevance in Tagore's creations more than a century after they were penned in colonial India. Introducing Tagore's short stories afresh to a generation intrigued by the contemporary interface of the global and the local is significant, as these stories are marked by a fascinating dialectic of historical contexts, with all their cultural particularity, and Tagore's vision of universal humanity.

Malobika Chaudhuri, earned acclaim as a translator when Parineeta by Saratchandra Chattopadhyay (Penguin, 2005) was published. Her other notable translations are Scarlet Dusk: Stories by Saradindu Bandopadhyaya (Rupa, 2003), Palli Samaj by Saratchandra Chattopadhyay (Penguin, 2005), The Last Time I Saw Tibet by Bimal Dey (Penguin, 2007).

Sexualidades Latinas en Estados Unidos

Sexualidades Latinas en Estados Unidos, is an anthology addressing key areas of research, scholarship, and critical discourses in the understanding of Latina/os and their sexualities within the United States.

Latina/os, the largest racial/ethnic minority group in the United States, represent a population that is currently larger than the entire populations of Canada, Spain, or most Caribbean and Latin American countries. Yet, there continues to be limited and skewed understanding of their sexualities. Utilising the available research on Latina/os in the United States, this edited volume, available for the first time in Spanish, addresses what is known, imagined, or remains invisible in the study of Latinos and their sexualities.

The critique provides foundational knowledge that can be used by students, scholars, service-providers, and policymakers as well as the general public.

Marysol Asencio is a professor of Latina/o, Caribbean, and Latin American Studies as well as human development and family studies at the University of Connecticut, USA. She has been awarded a Social Science Research Council Sexuality Research Fellowship and a Ford Foundation grant as well as other external and internal grants to advance scholarship and training on Latina/os, sexualities, and/or health.
